The Back Yard Wildlife

An on-line forum for families to participate in a fun game of identifying the little and big critters we all run into on our backyards/neighborhoods day to day. The idea is to use this playful exchange to and "sharpen" our appreciation of the animals that surround us, and while having fun at it, we also:

- Develop the ability to describe in detail the features of the species we encounter
- Strengthen our connection with the natural world so we can be better stewards
- Revisit and apply the geographic concepts of location (latitude, longitude, altitude) – geotagging.
- Generate data (population, geographic distribution, behavior, migration) that can be used for parents/educators and scientists on their conservation projects.

The more we know about something,
the more we enjoy it.

Our image of the future

We want to lead the creation of an open ended, non-physically bound and sustainable learning environment in which parents and children grow and develop through Art, Nature , Music, Physical Education and Languages.

How do we propose to make the image a reality?

Creating, developing and promoting enrichment programs, events and projects that:

- Have an interdisciplinary content/setting
- Strengthen parent involvement in the child's learning process
- Allow a holistic development of the child and the family by balancing intellectual, physical and emotional growth

How do we make it sustainable?

Integrating different players:

- Finding wonderful educators
- Finding families in the quest for enriching their children's education

Designing financial stability for both educators and families:

- Working with the educators to find alternative pricing models to ensure affordability of programs, projects and events
- Seeking financial support from private and public institutions
- Building a big network of families that take further steps toward the ownership of this educational model

The Homeschool Community

The home based education system that has strengthened in the United States for the last 20 years today supports more than 2.5 million children, and continues to grow at a rate of 12% per annum, as reported last year by the National Home Education Research Institute.

Despite the great diversity of motivations that are behind the homeschool decision, besides the great variation on teaching approaches employed by parents and their wide geographical and ethnical distribution, research indicates that academic success and positive attitude toward life and learning are among the leading common traits of the home educated individual.

There is something all homeschoolers have in common: increased involvement of parents in their children's education. We believe this is key to achieving the Enrichment Circle learning environment ideal.

All parents are homeschoolers! Educator and advocate for a better education, Rahima B. Dancy would say: Parents are their Children's First Teachers!

We are not supposed to be the only ones, though.

Whether partnering with local schools (full or part-time) or with an assortment of enrichment programs, we invite you to join us on building a great circle of enhanced education.
